Water and wastewater utilities in Missouri fall under several rate setting regulatory systems.

Commission-Regulated Utilities

The Missouri Public Service Commission (MPSC) regulates private water and wastewater companies in Missouri. The MPSC does not regulate government-owned water or wastewater utilities.

Pursuant to Mo. Rev. Stat. § 393.130.1, rates of commission-regulated utilities must be “just and reasonable and not more than allowed by law or by order or decision of the commission.” Under Mo. Rev. Stat. § 393.130.2, commission-regulated utilities may not grant any special rates or rebates to any person or charge a greater or less compensation for water or wastewater services than charged to any other person “for doing a like and contemporaneous service with respect thereto under the same or substantially similar circumstances or conditions.” Additionally, under Mo. Rev. Stat. § 393.130.3, commission-regulated utilities are prohibited from granting any “undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any person.”

Thus, for commission-regulated utilities seeking to implement a low-income customer assistance program (CAP) funded by rate revenues, the prohibitions on the granting of special rates or rebates or of any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage would likely pose significant challenges. Further, any CAP would likely need to be authorized and approved by the MSPC.

Noncommission-Regulated Utilities

In Missouri, utilities that are not regulated by the MPSC include public and metropolitan water supply districts and municipal-owned water and wastewater utilities. Chapters 91 and 247 of the Missouri Revised Statutes authorize the governing boards of these utilities to establish and collect “reasonable” rates and charges for water and wastewater services. Missouri state law does not expressly prohibit alternative rate structures or discounts based on nonservice characteristics. Additionally, some municipalities and counties in Missouri operate under home rule charters and, thus, have more governing authority to create their own programs.

In Shepherd v. City of Wentzville, the court held that, although municipal-owned utilities are not subject to the rate-making process of the MPSC, the courts have jurisdiction to prevent a municipality from imposing utility charges that are “clearly, palpably and grossly unreasonable.” The court further held that a municipality may classify its users for the purpose of fixing utility charges if that classification is reasonable and if there is no discrimination within a class.

207. An exception is made for the provision of a sliding scale for a fixed amount of time, provided the sliding scale is approved by the commission.

208. In Missouri, 44 municipalities (including the state’s 8 largest cities) and 4 counties have adopted home rule charters pursuant to the state constitution.

209. Shepherd v. City of Wentzville, 645 S.W.2d 130, 133 (Mo. Ct. App. 1982).
Therefore, for noncommission-regulated utilities, there is no clear language specifically authorizing low-income CAPs funded by rate revenues. Additionally, the authority granted in the state statutes is broad and limited by general reasonableness requirements and a prohibition against discrimination within classes, arising from case law. Home rule municipalities or counties have even broader authority to allow for CAPs funded by rate revenues, subject to any limitations found in local charters.

210. Several government-owned utilities in Missouri currently offer customer assistance programs that rely on customer revenues. For example, the Moberly Water Department provides a 25 percent discount (up to $10) on monthly water and wastewater bills for one year for income-eligible senior citizens and disabled customers. Additionally, the Metropolitan St. Louis Sewer District offers a 50 percent rate reduction to eligible low-income seniors and disabled customers.
